Nicholas Kunysz is a lawyer and partner at Morrison LLP specializing in family and civil litigation. Prior to becoming a lawyer, Nicholas spent time in academia working as a researcher on regime dynamics, indigenous issues, as well as a political risk consultant, during which time some of his research was published in a prestigious peer-reviewed journal. Nicholas further developed his interest in indigenous topics by working as a research assistant on Métis and other indigenous governance and consultation issues for all three years of law school.

In law school Nicholas won several awards and achievements, including first in his class for family law, first in his class for aboriginal law, winning team for a civil moot competition, and multiple scholarships. Since being called to the bar in 2019, Nicholas also co-founded and coaches the University of Alberta's Morrison LLP Family Law Moot.
